FUND COMMENTARY

Having performed strongly over the first eight months of the year, global equity markets fell back in September. As always, it is hard to pinpoint the exact trigger. At first, the Covid-19 Delta variant looked set to disrupt the recovery (air travel even reversed its improving trend in August) but good vaccine progress eased those concerns. Then, in September, a clutch of central banks around the world increased rates, most for the first time since the pandemic began, while the US Federal Reserve and the Bank of England signalled a move towards monetary tightening. Their thinking? Too much cheap money for too long runs the risk of triggering a hyperinflationary environment, particularly in the context of a global economy that is recovering well from the pandemic. For stock markets however, it means less money to fuel share prices, or so the thinking goes. Finally, the news that Evergrande, the Chinese real estate developer, was set to default on a bond repayment stoked fear of broader contagion.

For the managements of the companies that constitute your portfolio, these events likely sit very low in their list of concerns. This is because, for the most part, our portfolio companies sell products and services that are not at risk from the default of a Chinese developer, nor the second order effects of such an event. Meanwhile, the pricing power they enjoy means that our portfolio companies should be able to offset inflationary pressures, whilst their clean balance sheets mean the rising cost of debt is of little consequence. As a result, attention is far more likely to be focused on continuing to execute their respective growth strategies, whether it be penetrating the non-premium market for dental implants in the case of Straumann or developing the next generation of lithography technology for ASML.

There was no shortage of company news in the third quarter. ASML continued its march upwards ahead of its eagerly awaited investor day, at which it updated its 2025 guidance and gave a new 2030 guidance (putting it in a rare league of companies able to guide that far out). The new guidance implies 11% sales CAGR (compound annual growth rate) out to 2030, with likely faster earnings growth. We remain very positive, particularly following the recent pull back in the shares. In healthcare, Icon completed the transformational merger with PRA Health which will see it double in size to become the industry's second largest Contract Research Organisation (CRO), up from the sixth. The industry has been consolidating for many years, and we view this merger as a sensible step to gaining scale and relevance. Novo Nordisk rose sharply on the astronomical success of its new anti-obesity product, Wegovy, which led the company to revise its 2021 financial objectives upwards. Within just weeks of the product's launch in the US, it was already being prescribed more than its predecessor product, six years after launch! Along with the GLP1 franchise, Novo's obesity products should see the group's revenue growth accelerate to high single-digit levels over the next five years.

Among the detractors to performance, both Prosus and Adidas fell foul to Chinese vagaries. Shares in Tencent, which constitutes the lion's share of Prosus' value, fell following a slew of negative regulatory news flow from the Chinese Communist Party. While for the most part Tencent is not directly concerned (e.g. regulation around private sector education), the direction of travel creates uncertainty. Along with our colleagues dedicated to the coverage of Chinese equities, we continue to see regulatory threats as manageable but acknowledge a growing risk premium associated with our holding in Prosus. Indeed, we recently downgraded the company's ESG rating to reflect this, along with other governance shortcomings. In the meantime, an unrelated general boycott of western brands by Chinese consumers has been hurting Adidas' sales in the region. The Xinjiang cotton episode has served to strengthen Chinese nationalism, with Adidas caught somewhat in the maelstrom. We are monitoring the situation closely, but at this stage are cautiously optimistic that Adidas' long-term prospects in China should remain strong. Finally, GN Store Nord detracted from performance due to worries around its 2021 guidance in Hearing. The company's Hearing division continued to disappoint in the US and performance was also impacted by Covid-related headwinds in Japan, one of the group's biggest markets. A new portfolio position, GN Store Nord is a Danish medical technology company selling hearing aids and headsets (Jabra brand) that benefits from two long-term growth drivers: ageing populations and remote working.

During the quarter we sold out of Accenture, Experian, MTU Aero, SimCorp and Temenos and made a number of valuation motivated moves, reducing names that had become more expensive such as Straumann and Lonza. We reinvested the proceeds into names such as Adidas, Alcon, Bakkafrost, Linde, Novo Nordisk and Prosus.

We continue to think that the fundamentals of the companies that constitute your portfolio are strong. As written about in the past, we can now see tangible signs that the economy is exiting this crisis in a K-shaped manner. Pre-crisis trends are accelerating, whether it be digital investments, technological transformations or environmental considerations. The strong are getting stronger and almost every company in the portfolio is in some way benefitting from these dynamics. Demand for Kingspan's insulation panels is accelerating as companies look to reduce their environmental footprint. Sales of Sika's automotive adhesives, or Dassault Systemes' design software, have seen a boost from accelerating Electric Vehicle adoption. It goes without saying that ASML's prospects have only been enhanced by the semiconductor needs all these investments imply. Concretely, these factors, among others, have propelled the organic sales of the portfolio in the first half of 2021 at a double-digit percentage above the equivalent period of 2019, while European GDP is only just back to its pre-crisis level. In other words, the companies that make up your portfolio have grown their share of GDP. We see these dynamics continuing, which underpins our confidence that the portfolio will be capable of delivering strong and sustainable growth in the years to come.
